Biographical Sketch

John Vincent Madonia (1938-1993) graduated from the Loyola School of Dentistry in 1962. After receiving his Ph.D in Microbiology from Northwestern University in 1966, he returned to Loyola as an assistant professor of Microbiology. Throughout his career, Madonia served many administrative positions alongside his position as a professor, such as Director of Continuing Education, Chairman of the Department of Microbiology, and Associate Dean (1977-1985). Madonia completed projects for recreational facilities at the Dental School, including a gym, movie theater, auditorium, and the "Pub," where students would come for food and entertainment. During his time as a professor and administration member, Madonia founded the two-year Biostudies program, which academically prepared dental school applicants. John Madonia remained a professor at the Dental School until his death in 1993, two months before the school's final graduation.
